Mayor Jacobs and Commissioner Durrett compete in Annual 'Drive for Diabetes' Challenge at Top Golf

KNOXVILLE, Tenn.—Knox County Mayor Glenn Jacobs and Knox County District 2 Commissioner Courtney Durrett recently competed at Knoxville's Top Golf to help raise awareness about diabetes and encourage folks to live an active lifestyle.

"We try to have fun out here," said Knox County Mayor Glenn Jacobs. "One of the things we can do is live an active lifestyle and that really helps with our overall health and that's the message of what we're trying to do here."

Each November, communities recognize National Diabetes Month and find ways that encourage citizens to take action to prevent diabetes-related health problems. For the past four years, Mayor Jacobs and Commissioner Durrett have challenged each other in a fun sports event. They played golf this year after previously focusing on basketball at the Women's Basketball Hall of Fame, baseball at Dick's House of Sport, and pickleball at Carl Cowan Park.
