Mayor Jacobs Talks About Advance Knox, Greenheck Group, and More

KNOXVILLE, Tenn.— During his Weekly Update, which will post around 1 p.m. today, Knox County Mayor Glenn Jacobs talks about the Greenheck Group, the new Comprehensive Land Use and Transportation Plan, and the New Harvest Farmer's Market.

The Greenheck Group chose Knox County as the location for its fourth corporate campus, bringing with them 440 jobs and $300 million in capital investment with room for major future growth. This is one of the largest manufacturing operations to set up in Knox County during the past decade.

Mayor Jacobs also thanks the Knox County Commission and the Advance Knox leadership team for seeing the Comprehensive Land Use and Transportation Plan through to approval.

"I commend Commission for their input which helped make the plan better and for all their collaboration," says Mayor Jacobs.

Additionally, he invites everyone to attend the 20th annual New Harvest Farmer's Market, which is open every Thursday from 3 p.m. to 6 p.m. through September.
